Split Diamond Paintings to Present

Douglas Haynes works have challenged and engaged his audience for over five decades as a celebrated senior Canadian artist. This exhibition, curated by James Rottman Fine Art, features the Split Diamond series of the late 1970’s, the Toledo series works from the 1990’s and more recent works up to 2011.

Haynes’ Split Diamond paintings are a highlight of this exhibition. When Doug allowed me to represent and exhibit his work in Toronto, I was ecstatic. I have always been a huge fan of his works and own a number of his works in my own inventory. However, the fun really began when our agreement was finalized. I then found myself with the opportunity to view forty years of works produced by a nationally celebrated artist. What a thrill! One by one the paintings were being pulled off their racks for me to view. My objective was to become more familiar with his large body of work, as well as choose fifteen or so of my favourite works for the exhibition. It was amazing to see the depth, the evolution and the originality of Doug’s work in the scope of Canadian art.

When Haynes works were being pulled off the racks I immediately recognized the beauty and importance of these large format works from the late 1970’s in to the early 1980’s, known as the “Split Diamond Paintings”. I noticed some parallels between Haynes works and American colour field artists like Ken Noland, Jules Olitski and Canadian art legend Jack Bush.

The series that Douglas Haynes coined the “Split Diamond paintings” are magnificent paintings with their large central images floating about on the canvas, the central colours radiating off the surface. The paintings felt like they each possessed an energy, a presence and a personality of their own. I immediately called Doug to see if he had any more “Split Diamonds” in his studio. Doug, a very humble man with respect to his achievements as an artist, was totally nonchalant about these works noting that he would simply check the inventory in his studio and get back to me. The next day I get a phone call from Doug in Edmonton, calmly replying that he had a few more of these “Split Diamond” paintings rolled up. These amazing works of art had never been stretched or exhibited. I enthusiastically asked Doug to ship them to Toronto.

The “Split Diamond paintings” are a highlight of this exhibition, as these early works continue to speak to us, remaining fresh to contemporary perspectives. These ethereal works challenge the way we think about painting. These magical “Split Diamond” paintings, produced from 1977 to 1981, have been widely exhibited in the 1970’s in to the 1980’s at public art institutions including the Art Gallery of Ontario, The Norman Mackenzie Art Gallery, and the Edmonton Art Gallery, as well as being in touring exhibitions through Great Britain, Germany and France. Canadian art curators have included Haynes’ “Split Diamond” series, together with the most significant modern Canadian paintings, in important surveys of twentieth century Canadian art.
Douglas Haynes has always enjoyed travelling and has a deep interest in the history of art. Haynes’ admiration for historical artists, like El Greco, Nicolas Poussin and Titian, shows in his work. In the 1980’s and 1990’s Haynes recreated rich figurative works by El Greco into resolutely contemporary abstract images. This re-invention of the figurative by El Greco to purely abstract ideas can be seen in the Toledo Series works in the exhibition. These later works evolved for Haynes while on a study leave from the University of Alberta beginning in 1985. Haynes keen interest in the old master works took him on an extended tour through the great European galleries. It was this tour of the “old masters” that led Haynes to his inspiration for the later works.

“I always got a real buzz from the old masters. What struck me in the work of Goya, Velázquez was that they were doing everything that we modernists were doing, and yet they had all this other stuff in it. I started to think I wanted more out of my pictures than I had been asking for. I felt after I had seen these how much can be put into a picture. A big Velázquez, a big El Greco, they are not only big in actual size; they’re big in concept. They have horses, angels, stories; they lift the spirit; they have spirituality and skill, formally in terms of the art of painting... I wanted to change the way I was painting pictures.”

Curators over the year have compared Haynes’ works from the 1970’s and 1980’s to important Canadian and American colour field painters such as Kenneth Noland, Jules Olitski and Jack Bush. Haynes notes that Jack Bush was an influence; however, Bush’s approach was a reference for Haynes to further develop his own ideas. Haynes’ physical process and intellectual ideas emerging in the production of these striking paintings are quite different from the colour field movement. The body of works by Douglas Haynes in this exhibition clearly illustrates a unique expression in Canadian art. The works in this exhibition are a testament to Douglas Haynes great achievements as an artist.

James Rottman Fine Art is delighted to have the opportunity to highlight the historical “Split Diamond” works in this exhibition, together with more recent works. Several of these “Split Diamond” paintings have been stored in the artist’s studio for over thirty years, and have never been seen by the public. It is our hope that these magnificent paintings will fascinate and engage you and provide a window in to the history of late modernist painting in Canada.

Canadian art historian, Roald Nasgaard, notes in his 2007 book Abstract Painting in Canada: “This series of paintings marked the maturity for Haynes as a painter. The image structure that Haynes creates in the “Split Diamond” works provides Haynes with the armature for a rich range of sensuous painterly effects and colour orchestrations. Haynes manages to deliver emotional dramas dependent on a rich range of formal and spatial agitations (the split like a wound), such as contrasting textures, unexpected planes and streaks of searing colours, and hots and colds of hue and mood. Ultimately, these paintings appear like iconic figures winging their way in to space freighted with metaphorical content. When he was painting the series, Haynes found it useful to approach individual paintings a little bit like portraits.”
